

(An Egyptian Landscape, p. 2)

mind leaving her body and she continued to walk and il faut que l'on se voit ouvrir la porte and on the way to the Parthenon a triangle was formed. Three-angles and the Abbots Bromley Horn Dance is a unique dance and it is danced by six dancers for twenty miles and six dancers make two three-angles. Parade Harmonies: A Dialectical Self-Portrait is a processional dance of six dancers and it lasts for three hundred and sixty-six tableaux and who is the Fool and who is the Hobby-horse and who is Maid Marion the Man-Woman and who is the Bowman and who are the two musicians and who is not the Fool and who is not the Hobby-horse and who is not Maid Marion the Man-Woman and who is not the Bowman and who is not the melodeon player and who is not the triangl-er. Triangulation and given the isosceles triangle ABC with A the apex, new words are created when two or more humans agree that a particular sequence of phonemes represents the same experience, emotion, attitude or gesture. Assume that angle A represents the sequence of phonemes which constitute the English word "anger," and assume that angles B and C represent, respectively, the points of view of two humans. When both B and C agree that A represents, for example, "How I felt when I found out that two of my sheep were killed"--B's point of view--and "How I felt when my wife sold my favorite goat"--C's point of view--they can utilize that sequence of phonemes which constitute the English word "anger" instead of describing how they felt, and if enough humans agree that "anger" summarizes how they felt on a given occasion the word "anger" will soon be used by the entire population because it is easier to learn the word "anger" and to use it to describe how you felt on a given occasion than it is to describe how you felt on a given occasion. Similarly, when a child learns his native language he (assume the child to be angle C) must learn that adult speakers of his language use the word "anger" when they feel as he does when, for example, his favorite toy is suddenly taken away from him. Forme: et qui donc est le trianguliste?

(L'Aire: 9-7-75)